The Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum

In March 1990, two thieves disguised as police officers entered the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum in Boston. They tied up the security guards and stole 13 valuable artworks. The robbery lasted only 81 minutes, but it became the biggest art theft in history.

The museum was created by Isabella Stewart Gardner, an important art collector who wanted the museum to remain exactly as she designed it. Before her death in 1924, she wrote that no artwork should ever be moved or replaced.

Among the stolen works was a painting by Rembrandt van Rijn called Storm on the Sea of Galilee. The stolen artworks are estimated to be worth more than 500 million dollars today. Although the robbery happened many years ago, the crime remains unsolved.

Today, the museum still displays the empty frames where the paintings once hung. These empty spaces remind visitors of the famous theft and the importance of protecting art and cultural history.
